

One nation, diverse tourist destinations

"With age comes wisdom. With travel comes understanding"

Our country, India, truly exemplifies "Unity in Diversity." From the humble pandits of Kashmir, to the tea plantation workers in Kerela, we all feel the same sense of pride in being an Indian.

It is often said that a lifetime isn't enough to discover the beauty of diversity in every corner of our nation. Each state has its own significance.

The serene views of the Himalayas, the state of five rivers Punjab, the forts of Rajasthan, the Statue of Unity, the splendid beaches of Goa, the Adiyogi, the temple of Thiruvananthapuram, the mouth-watering Hyderabadi Biryani, the Konark Sun Temple, the Sundarbans, and the tea from Assam are few of the several landmarks that can describe India.

Going on a holiday to places in our own country helps us learn about different cultures. A few of tourism's collateral benefits include economic growth, job opportunities, building mutual relations, meeting new people and exploring new things.

Few of the main touristic attractions of India include monuments like Taj Mahal, Gateway of India, Charminar, Andaman and Nicobar Islands.

It is rightly said, "Wherever you go becomes a part of you somehow." Tourism improves cross-culture interactions. It is a hotspot for employment opportunities, making it one of the best sectors to promote the rate of employment in country.

Once we visit these places we realise that people around the world are connected in many ways.
